Let Technology Take Care of the Paperwork.

If you're like most medical offices, you're drowning in paper. The typical office handles tens of thousands of documents a year. This means you must allocate physical space to store volumes of patient information forms, patient charts, insurance claim forms and treatment authorization forms. You also have to hire people to file, retrieve and re-file clinical and billing-related documents. And, you need copiers and fax machines to duplicate and distribute original documents, as well as organize all documents originating from third parties such as hospitals and labs. All of these activities are wasteful and costly to your practice.

To comply with legal, insurance and liability requirements, you must store even more paper and make certain your document management processes are highly accurate and secure. For legal reasons, you probably store charts indefinitely. And, to meet insurance and HMO requirements, you must manage a host of forms. All too often, insurance companies lose these forms, forcing you to find them and resubmit them for payment.

In today's managed care environment, laboriously sifting through vast volumes of paper makes it difficult to maintain quality care. Having fast access to patient records with minimal effort and no need for storage space would enable you to maintain your high level of patient care and minimize administrative costs. That's where Express Digital Solutions can help.
